

Official Statement on the COVID-19 Crisis Ending and How That Will Impact Our Virtual Learning System:

During these unprecedented times, we want our EarlyBird families to know that the one constant you can always rely on is our commitment to education. Our mobile app will provide your children with videos on various subjects and topics, games to master these educational concepts, and tests to gauge their progress. We know that so much is uncertain right now, and during this time of uncertainty, the last thing you want is to feel like your child's growth and learning has been stunted or put on pause. With that being said, we are determined to team up with your child's teachers, who have been working so tirelessly and hard, to make sure that EarlyBird only continues to fuel your child's ability to learn during these times so that they don't miss a beat!

EarlyBird has always been designed to be a supplementary virtual learning system to aid in a child's rapid cognitive progression from ages as early as 1 and all the way up to age 8. Children are learning at such a rapid rate during this age range, about a plethora of topics, that we have established a broad curriculum that is in line with Common Core standards, but is also flexible enough to digitize the parents' job in today's fast-paced world. We are excited that children can use EarlyBird at any time of day that their parents deem fit. We are not a replacement for the school system, and we welcome President Biden's fast-tracked healing of this nation. We want this COVID-19 crisis to end, and given how dynamic our platform is with all of the latest high-end technologies generally reserved for middle and high school crowds, we are elated to know that we can bring the same high-tech educational joy to a young child in the Pre-K and elementary grade levels during this pandemic, both during it, and after.
